BY CRANSTON & NORMAN,

127 THAMES STREET.

MONDAY MORN'G JULY 14, 1851.

to-The following is the excellent Charge which was delivered by Judge Woodbury, on Friday, before the Grand Jury, of the U. S. Circuit Court, in this

JUDGE WOODBURY'S CHARGE.

Gentlemen of the Grand Jury:-

in the regular administration of the laws, exigencies cometines arise, when it becomes the daty of the Court to invite your attention particularly to a class or classes of those laws. It may of them have had the misfortune to be for-cibly assailed, though by a small por-tion of the community—if the public of-ficers, white enforcing them, have been resisted with violence, and this at mon-day, and in the very temple of Justice— It is a breach of the public peace, highly flagrant in character—the prostration of everything decrous and orderly, and it furnishes urgent reasons to examine the them have had the misfortune to be for furnishes argent reasons to examine the subject with a care proportionate to the aggravation of the outrage.

It is a part of our Constitutional obligations to secure an undisturbed administration of the laws, and shield the companies at large form a rentition of community at large from a repetition of riotous disorders, by prompt and exem-plary punishment of offenders; and it is due to the peaceable portion of the peo-ple to separate from them the guilty, so as not to let all remain under one indis-criminate ban of condemnation.

The circumstances adverted to, are supposed to have recently taken place in this Circuit, and being of very evil tendency, and exposed to occur again, and in each district of it, if not duly noticed, I shall unvite the attention of the Grand Jury in each to the exhibit. theed, I shall invite the attention of the Grand Jury in each to the subject—at the same time congratulating those, who may reside where nothing of this kind has hapkened, on their good fortune thus far the law-abiding principles which their population have evinced.—That the active participators in the violence referred to, and those who countenance them are very faw, in so moral tenance them, are very few, in so more and intelligent a community ought cer-tainly to be believed, unless the latter tainly to be believed, unless the latter fail to make a warning example of the guisty. In making such an example, it is true, we can and should be both charitable and just, but at the same time without being negligent as to the rights of the government of the whole Union, devoked on our protection in some respects within this region of our common country.

So far, therefore, as the subject of this excitement is connected with res-traints on human liberty, it is certainly traints on human liberty, it is certainly calculated to enuse sympathy, and in some respects to excuse error of opinion. But while tolerant as we must be to all differences of mere opinion and to free discussion; yet if they end in bad conduct, all must reprobate, and Courts of the marelyes implication, or, become themselves implication, will be unchained—should rove free as air—Freedom of speech, too, while disconnected with the disturbance of public bodies and the public tranquility, or with personal slander, or blesphemy, or exhortations to violence—may be wild as the waves. Much of the steam in with personal slander, or blasphemy, or exhortations to violence—may be wild as the waves. Much of the steam in society here is let off by that vent, as a safety-valve, harmlessly, or without dangerous explosions—but proceed to deeds—to force—to invocations to the netual commission of crimes—to the public descriation of the laws, and the destruction of order—and the whole aspect of the case is changed, and punishment must be inflicted, or ruinous anarchy is inevitable.

These last have always constituted a penal offence by the laws of the land, and not by the Fugitive Slave laws merely; though the enforcement of these last scens to have been the immediate occasion for most of the recent excitement and onthreaks.

occasion for most of the recent excitement and onthreaks.

But, as a matter of fact, Swhether these laws be defective in form, or ceneurable in operation—be liked or dishked by many at the North—is not the great inquiry for you or this Court on the present occasion. That would be very material for us if degiclators, and convened to discuss a change of those laws. On the contrave, met to enforce laws. On the contrary, met to enforce them in a Judicial capacity, your duty is to ascertain whether in point of fact the execution of them by the dely appointed officers, has not been resisted by force, and this still utilized to be re-leated, but therefore should not by by force, and this still intrised to be repeated, and therefore should not by our cattle, our duties, and the safety of society, be condignly punished.

Nor is the question a matter of opinion, whether slavery is not generally wrong—since on that point, in New England, there is probably only one opinion. But it is, whether, where this institution is solomally recognized to ex1st in some Sintes by the Constitution and acts of Congress, and must continue and acts of Congress, and must continue to be recognized, by the restoration of the figility, till those States choose to abolish it, or till the Constitution and acts of Congress on this paint on the acts of Congress on this point are altered, any individual is justified and is to be left unpunished. For attacking it unpunished, for attacking vio

be left unpunitiod, for attacking vio-lently the public functionaries in order to prevent the due performance, on this matter, of their official obligations? I would fain believe, that many have erred on this from a want of due exam-imation and discrimination, rather than mischiavans designs. And I do not mischievous designs. And I do not therefore, deem it amiss on this occasion therefore, deem it arms to the autoccasen, among other remarks, to attempt to refuse any under prejudices which might lead to further breaches of these laws, or render Grand Junter reluctant to punish attacks on them, when commit ted with brute force.

Looking at the history of slavery Los ling at the nistory of stavery in the cauntry, hispersonaledy, there will be to indices excuse for error, even at epinion, as to the recessity of some provision on this deheate topic, if the North is to continue at all united with the South; and looking at this and our interesting obligations of every based.

conduct—for menacing denunciations—and indeed such violence as to over-throw order, and by polluting the very sanctuary of Justice with anarchy and crime, strike at the root of all organized

It is well known to most of you, that before our Revolution, the parent country had allowed African slaves to the introduced into an the Colonies for purposes clintor, and had vindicated the poses allahor, and had vindicated the moral right to do it—as has since been done by the eclebrated Proclamation of the King of Spain in 1817—on the ground that most of them were already slaves, by capture in war and other calamities; and that hy such a porchaes, they were not deprived of liberty, but their criticing bondage rendered less section of the processing the sources and their contracts and their contracts. vere and less oppressive, and their convere and resoppressive, and their condition more civilized, humane and enlightened by christian principles. But, without upholding the sufficiency of this excuse, it is certain that when that great which regular our total exclusions. crisis arrived, our fathers found the stitution factored upon them, and in several instances against their strenuous remainstrances against their proceeded therefor to do with it what seemed ed therefor to do with a what extense the best in their power, under existing embarrassmeds. The Union was to be formed. The Union was if possible, to be made perpetual. Nobely their doubted as to this, or the mutual forbearance and concessions on this deli-cate subject indispensable to secure cor-

Slavery existed then among most of the thirteen Provinces—although the extent of it was much less at the North than at the South. Yet, regardless of such differences, all united, heart, head and hand, in opposing the common enemy; and, after the close of the Revolu-tion, all again united in the same way to guarantee their common rights by a common Constitution and a mutual compromise of opinions as to the continuance of the institution by each, till each in its own independent and severeign capacity, might deem it safe to abolish capacity, might deem it safe to abolish it. The foreign slave trade could be provided for, without peril or energadinent, its abolition being within the control of the General Government as an affair of foreign commerce. It was, therefore, regulated and virtually abolished, prospectively, in the Constitution itself. But the institution of slavery in each State could be regulated only by each State could be regulated only by itself, without making each a slave to the rest, and could not at once and ovthe rest, and could not at once and over the whole Union, he voluntarily abandoned without imminent danger to life, liberty and property of the white population, by letting loose all the terrific furies of linaticism, combined with extreme ignorance and bad passions.

It happened in this way, that the Northern States carliest commenced the extinguishment of slavery, the number in bondage there being fewer, and the measure therefor easier and less exposed to disorder.

ed to disorder.

And the process of emuncipation, under the inevitable operation of free principles, steadily and quietly advanced South; and, by means of colonization, still more rapidly and safely for all concerned, was on its beneficeat march, and was returning to benighted Africa arts and christianity, instead of buttal ignorance, beathers whitely by discount expense. officious external interference, tealing through servite insurrection thus excited, to cover with carnage and conflagration all the fair fields of the South.

The increased severities, necessary to prevent this and the more seductive appliances interposed to cause escapes, coupled with an unexpected judicial decision against the action of State mag-istrates on this subject, so augmented the lugitives from labor as to require closer attention to the guarantees, which had been provided in the constitution itself—for the security of this kind of property and the consequent amicable perpetuity of the Union as connected with it.

Among other things, the constitution had declared—Article 4th, Section 3d,—in these words that "no person, held to service or labor in one State, under the laws thereof, escaping into aucther, shall in consequence of any law or regulation therein be discharged from such service or labor, but shall be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labor may be due." In the service or labor may be due." In the opinion of some this may not in that great exigency have been the wisest compromise, to ensure the adoption of the constitution and perpetuate the Union. But our Fathers thought otherwise and perpetuate the Union. wise and inserted this clause by a unani-mous vote; and we, ourselves have votuntarily taken and retained to this mam ent the conclitation, with this clause in it; and, till duly altered, we can neither impair or repudiate it, even by legistion and much less by force, without infidelity to our duties and our oaths.

Even earlier than this provision and in the ordinance of 1787, which is so celebrated for abolishing slavery within its limits, a like provision was introduced to restore fugitives from labor to other portions of the Union.

It deserves special notice, that the principle involved in this restoration, now so severely consuced, seems then to have originated with Nathan Dane, the reputed author of that Ordinance—a New England man, and a fee to slavery. In 1789, too, by the provision as to this in the Constitution, our fathers did not establish involuntary servitude. As we have just seen, it has for several generations been established here by others. Nor did they undertake to regulate the internal institutions of each other, by interference, founded on their It deserves special notice, that the other, by interference, founded on their own abstract notions of what was equal or right, but left to each State, in its due sovereignty—as they should and must—the regulation of its own domesmust—the regulation of its own demes-tic concerns, without settling at all the grounds for or against the original legal-ity of such property in men of any color or condition. They merely allowed it to be returned whence it came; and as the Ordinance of 1757 had done before, the Ordinance of 1757 had done before, gave assurance to deliver it up for that purpose. It is to carry out the plain Constitutional daty, this provision, which we and our fathers accorded to, and have sworn to fulfil, that the two acts of Congress were since passed, which are assuited of late by each severe censure, and which some of the companies.

sist with unwarrantable violence. But the other States, the general government and the Union. For if legislating inflammatory opinions as to the origin so as to prohibit any State officer in his position, by force and riotous assaults on the ministers of the law, while exe. the case to the general government as inflammatory opinions as to the origin of these laws, and much less for opposition, by force and riotous assaults on the ministers of the law, while executing them, is very munifest from the whole history of the past, to which we have just adverted.

Without entering into the question of abstract rights, but recognizing the presently claumed by others elsewhere.

of abstract rights, but recognizing the property claimed by others elsewhere, in this class of persons as is done through various parts of the Constitution, and solemnly engaging as we have to aid its restoration when escaping—we did only what the fratermal feelings of all lead them to do, without constitutional engagements and coatts, at a other property, that is, to oaths, as to other property, that is, to friends and neighbors in regaining it, if lost—should it escape into our hounil lost—should it escape into our houndaries. And if that property existed in the service of even a white minor child or white apprentice, as it often does it would be no less just and right to assist in its recovery both at the South and the North—when appealed to by kindred blood and a kindred union, the houses of the future and the common kindred blood and a kindred union, the hopes of the future and the common triumph and glories of the past.

These reciprocal duties must also be discharged by deeds as well as words—boldly, faithfullly—with true loyalty to the Union, and not with evasion or procrastination. For if the promise is kept only to the ear, and the pledges of the constitution not fulfilled honorably in rets to others, how can we stand erect in acts to others, how can we stand erect as a moral, honest and manly people, or expect that the benefits of that consti-lation will be continued to ourselves in other respects—to our numerous privile-ges under it as to our commerce and rights—abroad, as well as at home—and in war as well as in peace.

It is due to the occasion and an act of justice to those who are supposed to be under erroneous impressions on this subject, to consider beside the projudices against it, some of the leading jus-tifications which have been set up for the use of inmult and violence against the execution of the constitution and laws concerning fugitives from labor. Some, who resist these provisions, attempt to excuse themselves under a very dangerous assumption in all cases for personal assaults, that they are clear-ly unconstitutional. I am not aware, for personal assaults, that they are clearly unconstitutional. I am not aware, that they have been so propounced by any judicial tribunal—the final arbiter on most such questions. Nor do I propose on this occasion, when no parties in interest are before me, to discuss that question. Beside this, a sufficient, and I have no doubt, satisfactory rule exists already for your guide upon it. The Supreme Court and the Courts of several of the States, after full argument between parties, have held the act of 1793 to be constitutional; and some of the to be constitutional; and some of the latter since the act of 1859 passed, have held the same concerning this; and it is a well settled principle, too, that all laws are by Courts and Juries to be presumed and treated as Constitutional, till the contrary is shown, or is adjudged by the Judiciary. We could not transact business a single day without such a principle. You have, then, a plain rule on this ground hereafter to all parties in interest for further discussion and adjudication, where they may come latter since the act of 1859 passed, have and adjudication, where they may come before the Courts for trial. Another bejore the Courts for trait. Another cobjection urged against them is, that they are strange in character—contrary to public opinion at the North—and for reasons like these, may be disregarded.

But if these allegations were true as to their strange or unpopular character, the inference from them, justifying for-mble resistance, is neither legal nor defencible,

The chief exception under this head is that at the hearing to send back a fu-gitive no trial by Jury is had. But the acts forbid no such trial—nor is the triand is or the escape or for any rights con-nected with it required by the law—to be without a jury—but may be with one, wherever and whenever in like cases it is provided by the Constitution or the common law. It is left by the practice common law. It is left by the practice under these acts to be at the place, where the escape or offence was committed, as is the usual practice in all cases, and the summary hearing to send back there a person escaped, has been without a jury at that hearing, since the first records of the common law—and probably in every civilized government of the known world. The acts of Congress too if wrong in any respect are open to any proper modification on this or other points—but there is nothing strange or unusual in them as they now strange or unusual in them as they now stand. And on the States allowing them—however unpopular in some pla-ces and however open to future amend-ment to be accounted assessed. ment, to be executed successfully, while the laws remain in force, depends in my opinion the continuance of that con-stitution and the sacred union it has created. Public opinion, in a majority, in some large regions may have become poisoned so as to continue to use via lence and justily it in resisting the con-stitution and laws on this subject. If so, which is not to be believed till demonwhich is not to be believed till demoustrated by results, it will be difficult if not impossible to succeed in punishing the offence throughout, and then the Union will probably ere long fall assuder, and all the horrers of its dissolution must burst on our astonished gaze.

But if the case be yet only that of a small minority, poseesing such views, if most of those who think badly of the law, think as badly of violent resistance if a majority intend to offer no forcible opposition, it being so rash and hos-tile to the whole genius of our institutions and to the whole genius of our institutions and to the reign of any laws and constitutions on any subject—nor to permit such opposition by others to go unpunished—there is hope left. This Republic will be saved. There still may be embarrassments by unfortunate acts of State legislation, but it is hoped that fatal errors.

It is due to the present non-slave-It is due to the present non-save-holding States to say, that no censure can be east on them for desiring the limitation and extinguishment of slavehimitation and extinguishment of stave-ry. But when carrying these natural wishes into effect by legislation so far as regards their own States, the difficul-ty has been for them to act only within (owing dulies us is often if not always the case to the general government as well as the State) from assisting to execute process for the restoration of tugitives, it would transcend all lawful measures in principle. The charitable construction of the existing statutes seems to me, however, to be that they intend to punish state officers only when acting as such officers, and not as citizens; else they would most unhappily come in direct collision with ather and permanent acts of Congress. And citizens relying acts of Congress. And citizens relying on them, and refusing aid, would find on them, and refusing aid, would had themselves in a most perilous position.—

Mistakes on this subject sometimes arise from not distinguishing that a State officer, who holds his commission from the State, and is accountable to it, may not be obliged to perform official duties for the General Government, from which he holds no commission; whereas a citizen and officer, as a citizen, owes allene holds no commission; whereas a de-izen and officer, as relizen, owes alle-giance and duties to both Governments, and neither can exonerote him from what is due to the other; but when each commands, the requisitions of the general Government are highest, or paramount. Indeed, in olden times, the strait-forward good faith of our Fathers, reactionward good faith of our Fathers, it is believed, in every State in New England, imposed an oath on every officer, which is still taken, however fulfilled by some, to support the Constitution and the Union. I cannot believe, therefore, that the legislative officers of any State have any where heen so torgetful of fraternal feeling in our fraternal Union, as not only, by legislation, to refuse its prisons for Constitutional purposes, and to punish its Judicial officers for aiding the General Government, or to punish the owners of fugitives for arresting and regaining their services; but to punish, and understandingly mean to punish, the citizen or inilitia man, as such, for obeying the comingly mean to punish, the citizen or ini-litin man, as such, for obeying the com-man le of the Marshal to uselet in the service of Indicial precepts. This can hardly be credited to any State compo-sing a part of this very Government and its Union, and, by its Representatives and Senators in Congress, aiding to pass these very laws for Marshals, and the appoint and remister this very Marshals. to appoint and regulate this very Mar-shal in all his official duties, and under the Constitution also aiding to discipline arm and govern this very militia, and their use, to help execute laws when resisted. And how unnecessary or inconsistent would be the provision in the constitution itself to restore fugitives constitution itself to restore inguives and in the acts of Congress to hold Mar-shals liable for escapes and rescues— provided they had not the right to com-mand from all citizens necessary assistance? And who compose their posse commitatus?—who can they resort to for aid but the people of each District or State?—a people, who belong to the government of the Union as well as to a State, and who are often operated upon directly and individually by that government. And if each State can in this way legally exhonerate its people from obedience to the summons of the Marshal, what becomes of the supremecy and invaluable right enjoyed by you and others under the wing of our Union. Congress provided the very first year of its existence, that every Marshal have power to command all necessary assistance in the execution of his sury dissistance in the execution of his duty." (I Statute at L. 87. 27 Section of act of Sept. 21th, 1789.) And if the Statute of a State provide, that whoever gives this assistance in a slave case, shall be punished, a State might just as properly attempt to exhonerate its cilizens from all obedience to the general government—when from service as a government—when from service as al government—even from serving as militia, on the orders of the President to repel a murderous invasion of your coast, or to help execute the laws against pirates who plunder your cargoes—or murderers of your sons on the ocean, or the wretched folons, who wiffully east away your vessels, or mutiny against your officers—in the lonely wastes of the Allantic or Pacific of the Atlantic or Pacific.

GENERAL SCOTT IN OHIO.-A tele mphic despatch from Columbus, Ohio,

3d inst, saye: The Whig State Convention assembled this evening, when the committee on resolutions reported a lengthy series, re-affirming the Whig platform of protection to domestic industry, internal improvements, &c., also recommending Gen. Scott to the Presidency, complimenting President Fillmore, and affirming that, inasmuch as the Compromise measures were not recommended by a Whig President, nor their adoption secured by a party vote in Congress, they are not party incasures, and therefore perfect liberty and freedom of opinion should be talerated among. Whigs upon the points of controversy involved .-The resolutions were adopted, and the convention adjourned.

33- The Telegraph reports that Gen. Talcot has been cashiered by the Court Martial, and that the President has approved the decision.

Judge M. M. Nosh said, in his "Weekly Mesenger," Jameny 6, 1850,

"Dr. Haeffacil's German Bitters.—Here is a preparation which the leading preases in the Union appear to be rusainous in recommending, and the reason is obvious. It is reade after a prevergiption furnished by one of the most cekbrated physicians of molern times—the late Dr. Christopher Wilhelm Hooftand, professor to the University of Jena, private physician to the king of Prussia, and one of the greatest medical writers Germany has ever produced. He was emphatically the enemy of hambug, and therefore a medican of which he was the inventor male endorser may be confidently relied on. He specially recommended it in Liver Complaint, Dyspapala, Debality, Vertigo, Acidity of the Stornach, Constipation, and all complaints arising from a disordered conditional the stomach, the liver and the intestines. Nine Philadelphia papers express their curvation of its excellence, and several of the colliurs speak of its effects from their own individual expanence.
